

How Much Does it Cost to Install a Flat Screen TV?

Getting a new flat screen TV should be an exciting venture - that is, until you try to figure out how it works. Flat screen TVs look better mounted on the wall and installing these isn't the same as the TVs of the past; you can't just plug it in and go anymore. Installing a flat screen TV on the wall requires some special attention. Possible outlet addition and wall mounting. Your first step after your new purchase should be to call a professional TV installer who can help you with all aspects of your installation project. Once you find a professional, there are a several things that will affect the cost to install a flat screen, LED, LCD, plasma, 3DTV.

Wall Mount Bracket

One of the most important aspects of TV installation is obtaining the proper bracket. A specialized bracket will ensure that the TV doesn't damage the wall or fall from its mount. This will be an additional cost to the actual TV, and there is a range of brackets. Some are more lightweight and will be more affordable, and others offer tilting or angling of your TV. The more complicated the bracket, the more the cost to install a flat screen TV will be.

Degree of Installation

The degree of installation will also impact the price. The cost to install a flat screen TV that includes hiding wires in a track molding outside of the wall will be more affordable. But if you want to hide the wires inside the wall, then the cost to install a flat screen TV will increase. This is a good option, however, for maximum concealment and safety from children and pets getting to the wires. In some cases, a new outlet might need to be installed to support your new TV. This will increase the cost to install a flat screen TV, but will make it much easier to hide the wires behind your TV. The more complicated the wiring becomes, then the more the project will cost. This could depend on if there are any obstructions in your wall or if there's limited space to install new wiring. Interior walls sometimes work better than exterior walls because of this reason.

Extras

Installing surround sound at the same time would be smart, but will also increase the cost to install a flat screen TV. (Ask your TV installer if a package price is available). You will also need to purchase all the necessary A/V and HDMI cables prior to installation. Your professional Television installer should advise you what is needed. Your professional will know what to do with all of the cables, just make sure to ask what extras you need when you purchase your new TV.

Location

In some cases, the location of the TV will impact the cost to install a flat screen TV. If it's difficult to access, then it might be more expensive. This will also affect the degree of difficulty for wiring. You'll want to make sure you pick a spot that is visible from as many places as possible and that it's at a comfortable height.

Overall, the cost to install a flat screen TV will depend on the complexity of the model you choose, how you want the wiring to be concealed and if you decide to tack on any extras. Regardless of what you choose, a professional television installation service will definitely help you unpack, assemble and connect your system. They should also explain how it works and will take the time to do so. Just make sure the installation service you choose is local because if you have a problem they will be easy to reach. Many national installation service companies hire whoever they can, divide the profits and you may never see them again. Find a professional you can trust. Contact your local Chamber of Commerce to recommend a local professional installation service company.

The average national cost to install a flat screen TV is about $365.00

Questions to ask TV installer.

Have FREE on-site estimates (No strings)?

Days and hours of operation that is convenient to you?

years of experience?

local business with local number?

Offer references of customers they serviced?

Offer any specials or free products with installations

Licensed & insured?

Are members in good standing with local Chamber of Commerce and other associations?

Accepts credit cards and checks?

Will they return you calls, text and emails fast?

Will spend time when you have questions?

Offer best price guarantee?